| What is a Brand Kit?

A brand kit is the key to understanding and communicating your brand identity. This kit is to be used by in-house designers and partners to ensure that your brand and image are communicated in a unified way on all fronts. For example, if your church branding was to be used with another church's branding for a conference/event, this kit should be sent to the relevant people to ensure that your brand remains consistent.

In short, a brand kit is a short guide to your brand's visual identity. Herewith lies a quick reference to understanding the logos, colors, fonts and messaging that represent your brand. These are the recommended ways that your brand should be presented to the general public and within the house, so that your image doesn't become diluted or misinterpreted.

| Logo and Colours

Contrast is very important, especially because this logo has a lot of detail. Recommended colors and gradients (with color properties) are on the page 7.

The black monochrome logo should be used:

- On a white background
- On a background with light colour(s)
- In the case that the background is different colours, an image, or texture, the background should be a light colour

The white monochrome logo should be used:

- On a black background
- On a background with dark colour(s)
- In the case that the background is different colours, an image, or texture, the background should be a dark colour

The gold gradient logo should be used:

- On a black background
- On a background with dark colour(s), preferably dark purples or dark red/maroon.
- In the case that the background is different colours, an image, or texture, the background, preferrably should be a very dark colour.
